Bob Hathaway and Zeda, his Zulu guide gazing into the magic crystal of the Hermit of Tiger Cave see the efforts of John Madson to find his missing daughters Helen and Marion. The crystal reveals how the baby of the wife of Madson's guide is stolen by a leopard and carried off into the jungle. Two tame apes who have been watching over the infant see the occurrence and follow, tracking the leopard and holding it at bay in a tree top. At an opportune moment one of the apes seizes the leopard by the tail and holds it captive while the other ape climbs to the tree top and secures the baby which it returns safely to its mother.

Here the vision in the crystal fades away and finding that only the past and not the future can be seen in the crystal, Bob and Zeda return to the camp of the Mad Prince.

Helen Madson who has been posing as the daughter of the Prince until his death from an accident, learns of the death of her sister Marion and decides to leave the camp and return home. Accompanied by Bob and Zeda as escorts she starts off on her perilous trip through the trackless jungles.

"Red Fox", overcome with hunger and fatigue is found by some English big game hunters who are en route to purchase wild animals from Markes Shad a native dealer, whose home village they soon reach.

Shad has just trapped a fine group of tigers and receives the visitors with great hospitality. Helen, Bob and Zeda also arrive at the home of Shad and receive a cordial welcome. Owing to limited accommodations, Helen is placed in a house with the young wife of Markes Shad and Bob and Zeda pitch their camp in the open outside.

"Red Fox" sees his enemies and seeing an opportunity for revenge, opens the doors of the tigers cage and the animals spring out, and almost reach the sleeping figures of Bob and Zeda. They, however are warned by the peculiar actions of a pet monkey who awakens them just as the hungry tigers pounce upon them.
